

Print Guide

WHY USE PRINT?

Studies have suggested that print advertising is the most cost-effective form of marketing with a higher return on investment than most digital media. Infact, 76% of small businesses state that their ideal marketing mix is a combination of print and digital communications.

(Pitney Bowes Survey/Choose Print)

5 reasons why print is the ideal medium for you to grow your business with:

Engagement

Consumers are more engaged when reading printed material than they are on the web, where pages are skimmed in as little as 15 seconds. In short, people are more likely to fully take in what you are saying.

Tangible

Print is a physical medium, meaning it can stay around for longer while internet ads and emails are more disposable.

Less saturation

With more and more businesses moving to advertising solely on the internet, print media now has an easier job in finding its voice and cutting through the noise.

Branding

Print is a great way to solidify your brand. Ads should carry a consistent look to them in terms of fonts, colours and imagery to establish greater recognition. Recognition brings a sense of familiarity which makes potential customers more inclined to purchase from you.

Credibility

Printed media often carries a greater sense of legitimacy due to the over saturation of online display advertising, which can be overwhelming for the audience. People are also becoming increasingly cautious of clicking on these ads because of the potential risk of viruses.

THE ART OF PRINTING

Printing is often much more complex than it looks and the jargon can be daunting for some. This guide will try and make it as simple as possible for you to get the best out of your prints.

GSM

Stands for “Grams per square metre”, and refers to the weight of the paper. For example, standard note paper is usually around 90gsm, while business cards are usually 300-450gsm. A standard takeaway menu is typically 130-170gsm.

Mic (Microns)

When a stock becomes substantial enough, we stop talk about its weight in GSM and start talking about how thick it is in Microns. 100 microns is equal to 0.1mm so this measurement is usually only used for large format substrates. For example, our cardboard display boards come at 2000mic.

CMYK

Stands for “Cyan-Magenta-Yellow-Key(Black)”. This is the colour gamut used by printers which determines the range of colours that can be reproduced. Computer screens work on an RGB (“Red-Green-Blue”) colour gamut, which offers a larger range.

Paper Types

Silk Coated

This type of paper is also known as a satin-matt as it is considered a hybrid between a gloss and matt finish. The paper has a slight sheen to it but not a full gloss finish.

Uncoated

A matt paper with no noticeable finish such as a shine. It is ideal for writing on and commonly used for letterheads and compliment slips.

Recycled Uncoated

A recycled alternative to the uncoated stock.

PVC

A durable plastic available on posters. Printed on using UV inks that will take longer to fade than other inks. This is used to create posters that can tolerate being exposed to the British weather.

PVC/Latex Hybrid

A hardwearing, robust substrate used for our roller banner range. This stock is flexible and lightweight yet shatter and crack resistant for frequent use.

Finishing

Matt Lamination

A subdued finish that softens colour and adds a smooth texture. Ideal for a sophisticated, modern look.

Gloss Lamination

A high gloss finish that is ultra-shiny. It makes colours vibrant, rich and punchy as well as helping to hide fingerprints and scuff marks. Ideal for photographic images.

Soft-touch Lamination

Gives a nice feel to the print likened to the texture of a peach. Colours appear deeper and richer than with a Matt Lamination. A finish that gives prints the utmost in luxury.

PP (e.g. “8pp”)

Stands for “printed pages” As an example, an A4 piece of paper folded in half is an A5 4pp because it has 4 printed sides each one A5 in size.

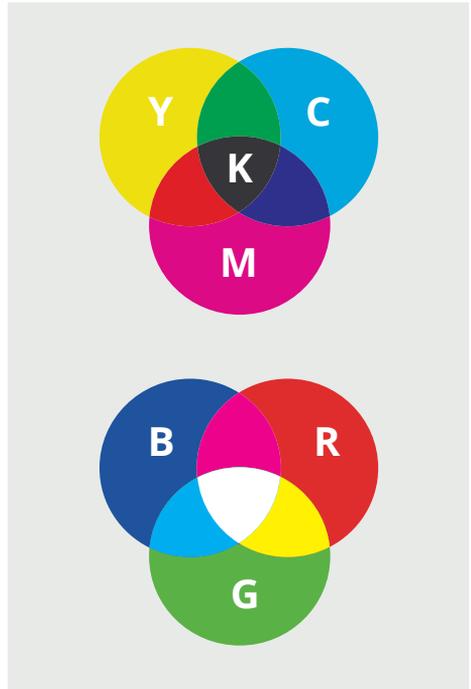

Spot UV

A finish to really impress, spot UV highlights specific elements of your design with a high-gloss coating. This sophisticated finish creates texture and intrigue, making sure your print is remembered. Must be used with matt lamination.

CMYK is called a subtractive process because it is a process that blocks out light using physical colouring agents like ink. RGB, however, is an additive process because it combines different coloured light streams to create its colours. RGB can only be produced on electronic screens, hence why we must use CMYK colours in print.

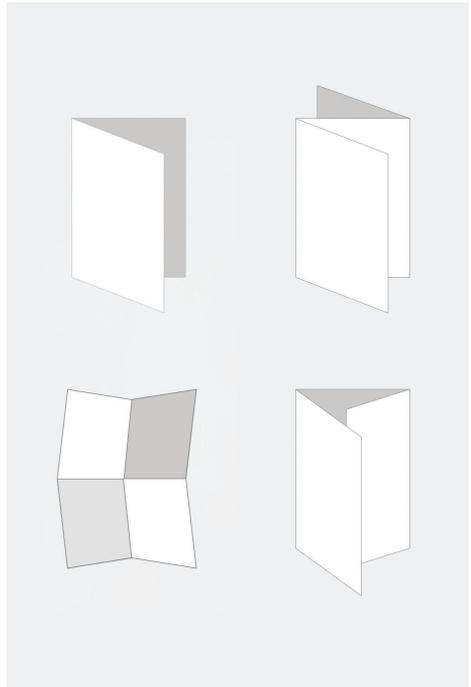

Some colours, particularly bright or fluorescent ones, are not achievable with a CMYK printing process and prints may look different to how they do on screen.

This is why it is important to make sure that your artwork is designed in CMYK. RGB colours will be converted to their closest CMYK substitute.
